ONCE UPON AN ADVENTURE

You're sitting there, talking to your friend Jughead. He says, "Arafat, I need something to take my mind off this tension. Why don't we do some dragon fighting?"

The moment he says this, a fireman appears. He is made entirely of plutonium. He clears his throat ominously and says, "You must find the gatekeeper. He knows your destination. You will find him in Midtown."

You decide to go looking for him. Your friends Sammy and Selene decide to join in. Munching on ice cream burritos, you guys start your adventure.

When you've almost reached Midtown, you come to an intersection with train tracks. There's a train coming, and the crossing gates are lowered. Sammy slows down the car and stops at the crossing gates. He says, "You know guys, it's really important to be track smart. I read that it takes a train one entire mile to stop moving. So we should be careful around train tracks." Jughead says, "You're right. I'd rather wait thirty seconds and be safe before we go looking for this gatekeeper man!"

You've reached Midtown. You see a fortune teller, a talking iguana and a robotic T-Rex. This is definitely a weird neighborhood. But you don't see a gatekeeper anywhere.

All of a sudden, the plutonium fireman appears again. He says, "Your adventure will begin when you find the gatekeeper. He has a one track mind."

Suddenly, a clap of hands from Selene. "Eureka! I know who the gatekeeper is! Destination—one track mind—it's all so clear now!"

Taking Selene's direction, you pull into the Amtrak station. And there he is—the gatekeeper. Holding tickets for all of you to go on a trip. Any of more than 130 destinations.

This was a surprise gift that your parents got together and planned out for you.

And the plutonium fireman? It was a hologram that your mad genius friend Dilton created. But that's a story for another day.
